Overview

Jeremy Taylor is an Edmonton-based litigation lawyer with a practice focusing on corporate commercial disputes and labour and employment law. His clients include public and private corporations and other business entities, individual corporate officers, directors, and shareholders, provincial and local government and community entities, police services and professional organizations.

Jeremy's areas of focus include the following:

- Corporate and Commercial Litigation – shareholder disputes and other business ownership/control cases, procurement (tender and RFP) litigation and risk management, breach of contract and commercial transaction claims, real estate/land disputes, insurance issues and protection of proprietary rights
- Labour and Employment Law – wrongful dismissal actions, collective agreement grievance arbitration, labour relations board complaints, employee benefits litigation and employment issues in business transactions
- Aboriginal Law and Litigation – governance issues, asset disputes and constitutional rights cases
- Other Civil Litigation – police liability defence and defamation cases

Jeremy has argued cases before all levels of court in Alberta, the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Canada, the Provincial Court of British Columbia, commercial and labour arbitration boards and various administrative tribunals.

Value to Clients

"In litigation, strategic and high-quality advocacy is crucial to achieving a client's goals. My style of practice focuses on identifying the key issues in dispute, determining the most efficient path to the client's desired result, and delivering superior work product to achieve that result".

Outside the Office

Jeremy and his family (including young twins) love skiing, travelling to warmer locations and spending time outdoors.
